IN BABYAZOOH-LAND.
An elephant sat in a tree top high
And watched a song of zee,
While an eagle browsed in a pasture nigh
By the side of a humberlee;

A serpent stood on a moss-grown rock,
Discussing the Tariff law,
And a tiger tried to pick the lock
Of a ship canal he saw;

A big green parrot was planting stones
To raise rock-candy crops,
And a turtle piped in shrillest tones
Above the palm tree tops;

A sacred cow and a lioness bold
Were playing a game of chess,
While an old one-wolf was catching cold
And sneezed till she tore her dress;

A languorous zebra gayly flew
From flower to tender bud,
And an antelope with eyes of blue
Was making pies of mud;

But a big baboon came up just then
With a grumpy, grumpy grin,
And said the clock was striking ten,
And that spoiled all the fun.

He has been but two weeks out of the penitentiary when he is again taken in charge. Chief of Police Goodson took an interest in the youth and tried to reform him. GOVERNOR BROWN has signed the "separate coach" bill. THE ONLY TRUE AMERICAN CITY.

Philadelphia the City of Pleasant Homes and not of Overcrowded Hovels.

The census reports show us that in the matter of separate homes for private families Philadelphia is the most happily situated of any city in the country and probably in the world. Some time since, as we learn from one of Mr. George W. Childs's estimable papers, The Public Ledger, the women of Philadelphia took in hand the matter of designing a model home for working people. The pattern adopted was a separate house for each family, with not only heaters, a range and hot and cold water, but with a little yard and garden to each. In such a veritable palace of luxury any Philadelphia family can dwell if they can pay as much as eighteen to twenty dollars a month rent. So successful has proved the model cottage designed for the working people by the Philadelphia ladies that they are preparing a pattern of one of the houses for exhibition at the World's Fair. It will be a model richly worth studying by inhabitants of other cities.

The comparatively very large number of Philadelphia people who live in homes all to themselves is shown in the following extract from The Ledger:

"According to the printed statistics, Philadelphia with only a little over a million inhabitants, has 187,052 dwellings, or an average of only 5.60 persons to a dwelling. New York, by contrast, with a population of over 1,500,000, has only 81,838 dwellings, or an average of 18.52 persons to a dwelling. The average Philadelphia family is larger than the average New York family in the proportion of 5.10 persons to 4.84 persons. Only 15 per cent. of the houses in Philadelphia are occupied by more than one family. In New York 88 per cent. are so occupied and in Chicago 65 per cent.

"There are of course many reasons for the distinct advantage which Philadelphia possesses over other cities, but undoubtedly the greatest of these are the favorable situation of Philadelphia as regards growth, and the power of expansion, and the ease with which property may be acquired in this city. If the census report had included the proportion of houses owned by their occupants Philadelphia would have shown to even better advantage. To the building societies is due much of the marvelous growth of Philadelphia in this respect. The opportunity to acquire a home by means of this most useful form of organization is in the hands of every thrifty workman.

"The purchase or erection of homes reacts on the builders, causing them to offer more and more attractive houses as the demand increases, and with it the competition. The women of Philadelphia have designed the Philadelphia house. They have demanded that every room shall be lighted directly, that each room shall be entered by a separate door, and have insisted on the various little conveniences one after another which now go to make up the Philadelphia home. Not long ago a competition was held in Chicago for the best model of a workman's home. The plans which won the first prize would have been discarded at once by any Philadelphia woman. Unlighted bedrooms and communicating rooms were among some of the evils of the plan."
